“Accountability in the Work Place”

The term “accountability” is being heard more and more often, and is a behavior that many organizations and individuals say they value in the people around them. However, the term is defined differently by organizations and individuals alike, and the opinions on how to develop more “accountability” are plentiful. If you are interested in improving the atmosphere of accountability for yourself and your organization, this training is for you!

Learning objectives include how to:

- Recognize barriers to accountability
- Assess your own level of responsibility, empowerment and accountability
- Build team empowerment within the organization
- Evaluate the perception of organizational culture
- Utilize the accountability cycle through various practicing techniques
- Understand and use various tools to gain agreement and to address challenges
- Plan more effectively
